Information Sheet

Introduction

Member States have developed regulations for the safety and security of nuclear facilities, as well as radioactive material and associated facilities, including inspection programmes for compliance. Due to the increasing computer security threats to the nuclear industry, computer security regulations also need to be developed and implemented, at the State level, to ensure the protection of nuclear information and operations and to maintain the integrity, availability, and confidentiality of all nuclear and other radioactive materials, and associated facilities. This international workshop will provide relevant information on the international instruments and IAEA recommendations to enhance national regulators with a framework and regulations for computer security that can be integrated into their existing regulations.

Objectives

The objective of the workshop is to present participants with the international instruments and IAEA recommendations for the drafting of computer security regulations of physical security, radioactive material, and material outside of regulatory control. The workshop will include both frontal presentations and group discussions to learn and draft national computer security regulation.

Target Audience

The event targets competent authorities, regulators, technical officers, and lawyers responsible for, or involved in, the development, drafting, and implementation of regulations for a state-level regulatory program. Participants should have a good understanding of the existing legal and regulatory framework in their country as it relates to computer security.
